
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Ideas take shape through dialogue, and even I can only talk to myself for so long. This book exists thanks to the insights of numerous interlocutors and the support of so many people it has been my privilege to know.

First and foremost, special thanks to two research mentors, role models, and advocates, Tracy C. Davis and Maggie Gale, who believed in this project and in me at a time when I believed in neither. This is a book about the imagination of an endpoint, of a process completed, of a project achieved. They saw it before I did.

Thanks to the entire team at Manchester University Press, the anonymous reviewers, and series editors Maria Delgado and Maggie Gale (again) for their enthusiasm and for the questions and suggestions that made the work better.

For conversations, guidance, and support in the early phases of the project, thanks to Dawn Brandes, Nick Davis, Scott Durham, Hannah Feldman, Shannon Fitzsimons, Keith Byron Kirk, Jules Law, Susan Manning, Dassia Posner, Elizabeth Son, Kati Sweaney, Wendy Wall, Will West, and Harvey Young.

Many of the conversations that spurred the development of this book took place at meetings of the American Society for Theatre Research (ASTR), the Theatre and Performance Research Association (TaPRA), the Summer Institute in Cologne, and the Inside/Outside Europe research network. Some of those conversations were about the research, some were about the profession, and some were about lunch. All of them helped. Thanks in particular to Susan Bennett, Hayley Bradley, Kate Bredeson, Michele Liu Carriger, Joseph Cermatori, Jordana Cox, Adrian Curtin, Bertie Ferdman, Jason Fitzgerald, Sascha Förster, Marissia Fragkou, Philip Hager, Ryan Hartigan, Jen Harvie, Kimi Johnson, Ric Knowles, Eero Laine, Bryce Lease, Laura Levin, Megan Lewis, Peter Marx, Patrick McKelvey, Michael McKinnie, Derek Miller, Koritha Mitchell, John Muse, Sam O'Connell, Louise Owen, Giulia Palladini, Ana Puga, Nicholas Ridout, Aileen Robinson, Nick Salvato, David Savran, Jon Sherman, Kim Solga, Aaron C. Thomas, Tara Rodman, and Marilena Zaroulia.

Early fieldwork for the project was generously funded by a Fulbright research grant. Thanks to Patricia Janin, Pauline Boitard, and Arnaud Rojou-Boubée of the Franco-American Commission, and to Emmanuelle Chérel, Laurent Devisme, and Amélie Nicolas of the research group Langages, Actions Urbaines, Altérités (LAUA) at Nantes' Ecole Nationale Supérieure d'Architecture. Many thanks also to Anne Gonon of HorsLesMurs, who welcomed me into the fold of French street theatre scholarship.

I am indebted to the librarians and archivists at HorsLesMurs, the Centre d'Histoire du Travail, Archives Municipales de Nantes, Médiathèque Jacques Démy – Fonds Patrimoine, Médiathèque Jean Jaurès – Fonds François Mitterrand, Archives Municipales de Lyon, le Rize, Archives Grand Lyon, Association de l'Histoire de la Construction Navale Nantaise, the Bibliothèque Nationale de France, the Maison des Hommes et des Techniques, and the Conservatoire Citroën.

My sincerest thanks to the theatre companies, collectives, and artists discussed in this book: Théâtre de l'Unité, Générík Vapeur, Metalovoice, KompleXXKapharnaüm, BlÖffique Théâtre, La Machine, Fer à Coudre, and Fabrice Giraud. Their work made mine possible. Special thanks, too, to the former factory workers who graciously answered my ignorant questions and shared their memories with me. Their work also made mine possible (among many other things).

When I moved to Manchester from the United States I dared not hope for a friend and colleague like Rachel Clements. Luckily, we found each other anyway. Thanks, Rachel. Also at the University of Manchester, thanks to Cara Berger, David Butler, Felicia Chan, Kate Dorney, Maggie Gale (once more), Jenny Hughes (who lifted me over the last and highest hurdles), Alison Jeffers, Victoria Lowe, Simon Parry, Steve Scott-Bottoms, and Johannes Sjöberg. Thanks, too, to the intrepid students on my Street Theatres course, with whom I have tested some of the ideas in this book.

As we move from one place to another we form new attachments, make new homes, and join new families. I'm quite terrible at keeping in touch with these families, but my affection for them and their belief in me are the inks in which these pages are printed. To the (extended) Northwestern cohort, to Hélène Bobille, to Helen Day-Mayer and David Mayer, to Debbie Witton and James Thompson: thank you. And to my first family – my parents, Margot and Sandy, and my sister Anne-Marie – I dedicate this book.
